At no time this spring have the Nationals played as poorly as in the four to indicate both lack of judgment and overanxiety. The pitching, on the whole, was good, but the support given the pitchers fell far below the mark.

This combination is figured to greatly strengthen the team's hitting strength, which, however, has not been evident, as yet.

George McBride was once more made the target for abuse from the stands when he was in no way to blame for what happened. In the fifth inning, with Rath on first and none out, Lord hit a sharp grounder at Groom, who, in throwing to second, threw wide, and both men were safe, when theer should have been a tionals received the long end of a close

A moment later Zeider popped up a little fly to short left. McBride was after the ball, but before he set himself to catch it Moeller called for it, and Mc-Bride stepped aside, as he should, with the result that Moeller did not come through, and the ball fell safe. McBride had to shoulder this blame, too, though there seemed to be enough people in the stands who know base ball and silenced

Schaefer's injured wrist gives Griffith a chance to get a line on Cashion's ability as a hitter. The big fellow came through with a home-run drive yester-day, and it is figured that he will be of of why the game went to them. The airtight fielding was in order, and it was much service to the team if played in that position regularly. Just how good a he is remains to be seen, for he did not have a difficult chance yesterday and caught the only fly into his territory. But there seems to be no doubt as to his hitting. In practice yesterday morning, with Musser pitching Cashion hit a line drive over the score board, the ball passing over where the word "Innings" appears. It went over on a line and lodged in the trees the tops of which can be seen from the stands. This hit, in the opinion of the players who witnessed it, is one of the longest in the history of the game, and if it had been made in a game it would undoubtedly have gone down as

Walter Johnson will pitch against Cleveland today. Just which of the Naps' pitchers will oppose him had not been decided this morning by Manager Davis. Johnson had an off day when he faced the White Sox Wednesday, but he proposes to make amends for that comparatively poor showing today.

The Manual Trainers not only have a have what the others have lacked—a veteran pitcher. That will mean a great deal in favor of them, especially if the contest turns into one in which both sides score many runs as was the foot sides.

Navy Yard put up a creditable game, although beaten. The Southeast lads pulled three fast double plays on the champs. Manhattan tied Loffler for first place score many runs, as was the case when Central was played.

There is a possibility, of course, that Tech may lose to Eastern next Tuesday,
